RISK NO BUSINESS CAN AFFORD

Data theft is becoming commonplace. The secondary market for IT hardware is a haven for information thieves who retrieve and exploit business and personal data from hard drives. Consider the following reported in a major technology publication:

"An Idaho Power Company found itself in an uncomfortable situation as it attempted to track down several unscrubbed disk drives that had been sold on eBay. The drives contained confidential employee information, correspondence with customers and memos that discussed proprietary company information. The company said it hired an outside contractor to recycle about 230 SCSI drives. The contractor had sold 84 of those drives to 12 different parties using the online auction website."

An annual study published by Scotland's University of Glamorgan on hard drive erasure reported:

"Each year, university researchers buy hard drives on eBay, at computer shops or from recycling company and then study them to see what data could be found using off-the-shelf tools. This year, the study found sensitive data on 62 percent of 133 working drives purchased in the U.K." There is a case where the data belonged to a major UK hospital group and another one from a huge UK Oil company."

We are capable of repairing many circuit board problems because normally a board failure is often caused by one usually inexpensive component, it is often more cost-effective to repair the board than to replace it. With today's fast pace changes in technology, many boards tend to be obsolete or no longer available after two or three years, leaving repair as the only viable option. We will accommodate and support you through our extensive parts inventory and technology.

Circuit Board Repair Without Schematics

We use the test equipment to look for electronic signals from components to ascertain the component's condition. We test in both static and under power conditions. If we suspect a particular component to be faulty, it will be replaced. We continue troubleshooting through the board until all components have been tested. We use our years of combined experience to quickly locate and replace the defective components back onto the systems. Our staff has experience in repairing different types of electronic equipments, owned by well established companies.

With such wide experience along with the data base of thousands of repairs, enable us to locate the defect in split seconds. We also use the reverse engineering approach to start at the missing signal or action and work backwards to where the signal should be found in the process locating the defective components.

With current advanced technology of more sophisticated and expensive circuit boards, the option of repairing instead of replacing, is making sense to more OEMs. We repairs boards for plasma TVs, a wide range of computer peripheral and consumer electronics, as well as specialized telecommunication equipment for medical, security, transportation (automotive), and other industries.
